Question: Why did you choose this format of question and answer?

A. I figure I can answer any questions thrown at me.

Q. What does Wabash mean to you?

A. It's a nice place to visit but I wouldn't want to live here.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. I'm—Don't get me wrong. Wabash is basically a wonderful place to get an individualized education. I came here because it was a small college with excellent instructors and facilities. In short, I was just plain selfish—I wanted the most for my money and I found that Wabash fulfilled the unique personalized four years that I was after.

Q. Now, wouldn't you say that the school is quite backwards and quite isolated from reality?

A. Now, if you mean by backwards that Wabash is still all male while the "progressive" schools have become co-ed, then I'll have to disagree with you. This past year, we had a convocation to discuss the issue of co-education on the Wabash campus. Only 30% of the student body participated. The rest of the students either didn't care one way or the other or they packed up for home.

There are some students who sincerely believe that co-education can really be an educational benefit to all those concerned, but I think the overwhelming majority of the students think of the coed as a sex object and co-education as a means of fulfilling their social objectives.

Q. Well, isn't it unnatural?

A. Then you are saying civilization is unnatural. You see, all of man's struggle is a struggle against the natural emotions that are within him. That's what separates man from beast—the control of his emotions. Morals, customs, and traditions in general aim to reduce the inborn destructives of man's Hobbesian natural state so man can live with other men without fearing for their lives. There are those who, in order to maintain their peace of mind, have to be around girls. I think they should be better off if they transferred. There are those who came here for an education, and can be perfectly content to exist in all male environment for four years in order to obtain an education. I don't think Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Dartmouth and Wabash have produced a disproportionate amount of perverts in their long, all male history. It is, basically, a matter of proprieties. I really don't think that many valid arguments besides the "they're doing it so why don't we" position, have been advanced to warrant Wabash's transformation. It seems somewhat paradoxical that we are willing to plan for co-education when the President says we cannot afford to even keep the gym open on weekends and at night. I think we should maximize the quality of campus life for Wabash men before we take the irrevocable plunge into the morass of co-education.

Q. Since you were talking about quality of life, what effects do you see the changing American society is having on the campus?

A. Traditionally, the function of one's parents is to transmit to the child the positive values of a society and culture. If we look at the affluent middle class parent of today, we see a vast normlessness. Instead of the child being taught identity and values through parental authority, we often find that it is the reverse—the parents fearing the child's disapproval. The child is loved and often bought. A victim of a moral and cultural vacuum.

School and college serve youths no better, merely being an extension of the parent's tolerance and enlightenment. The enlightened faculty member says no to society without replacing the deletion. He is against "nationalism, and "repressive" morality. He becomes wrapped in the rhetoric of change which often becomes an end unto itself without regard to the values and accomplishments of the past. Thus the school becomes a transmitter of the negative—the modern student grows up in a vast vacuity.

Q. Are you saying that the Wabash student is "depraved on the account that he's deprived"?

A. No, I'm not. The Wabash student is more or less conservative. What I am getting at is the point that there are tremendous pressures from the outside to make Wabash conform, both the institutional, as we have seen with the co-education controversey and the student. With the Wabash student strike, it can be seen how conformism through activism can be a fantastic force upon the individual. One cannot help but feel mass psychology at work: the arm bands, the red fist, the omnipresent rhetoric of "Power to the People", all the the accoutrements of the Romantic young idealist. A free university program was set up, one of which was to "educate" the students of the "fascist threat to America". Indisputable, the strike was not apolitical. Why was the Young Americans for Freedom denied recognition on the grounds that it was a political group (even though the AASU was given $1300) and in one month, the Student Senate completely reverses its stand and supports the strike against U. S. involvement in Cambodia? Why wasn't the anti-strike forces, led by YAF, given use of the Student News Service equipment? Is it too much to ask equal treatment from those enlightened crusaders of equality? Conservative students by nature are non-activists and thus a disproportionate amount of the "action" on campus will inevitably emanate from the left. It is this base of silent "support" that is the real threat to peace and justice on the campus and across the nation. It is not enough to say you believe in an idea, one has to be versed enough to defend it and propagate it. or else . . .

Q. So you believe we should be in S. E. Asia?

A. No one likes war. But there is such a square thing called honor, committment, freedom. It was not the Neutralist and Rightist factions that left the Laotian coalition government and occupied, 1/3 of Laos. It was not neutralist Cambodia that invited the Communists to set up their headquarters and sanctuaries there. Who is kidding who about liberations?

Q. Here we go to the old policeman and communist conspiracy bit.

A. It seems funny that the neoisolationists are the same people who cry so much about equality and justice and yet, they act as if the greatest threat to those values, Communism, doesn't exist. Whatever happened to the anti-communist Left? Are they serious when they say we should just get out of S.E. Asia? What about our word to all those who trusted in the U. S.? The Communists entered Hue with blacklists and after the offensive 4,000 bodies were uncovered in mass graves. I wonder what kind of fate awaits those who cannot escape, unlike the one million Chinese who did escape to Hong Kong. We didn't ask for the role of policeman but neither can the United States avoid being the most powerful nation in the world. It is the price we pay. This can only be termed reactionary in a society where irresponsibility has become prevalent.

Q. How can you justify the death of over 40,000 American boys in a seemingly endless war?

A. That's just it, I can't. I cannot tell anyone, let alone fellow students to go over there and possibly die for a no-win war. How true it was when President Nixon characterized his move into Cambodia as decisive whereas the previous administration's policy of gradualism was a complete failure. In effect, Johnson's policy tried to appease a very minute number of influential "peace" opinion makers at the expense of American lives. If only that other candidate had won then . . . . . .

Q. Before you said that Communism was the greatest threat to man, now, don't you think Capitalism has created all of this pollution mess which is going to kill us all anyway?

A. Pollution is not unique to Capitalist societies. Those who prescibe the "change the system" solution overlook the one flaw—it just isn't true. Socialism breeds as much or more pollution than capitalist ones. In the huge Perm oil field in Russia there is no drainage at all. The oil collects on the ground, flows into the Kama River which is the Volga's largest tributary. Perhaps, the best way to express it is that pollution is not the product of the free market economy but rather is the product of modern technology. Pressure is on American industry to clean up its mess and industry has no choice if it doesn't want to be hit where it hurts the most—loss of consumer dollars. One wonders where the pressure to clean up comes from in the socialist countries, where the bureaucrat, not the consumer, is the boss.

Q. How come this article is so long?

A. I like to talk to myself.

Ray Wong '71

For the Wabash student whose political convoctions lie somewhere left of center, the academic year 1969-1970 proved to be one of the most exciting in quite a while. If the radical student at Wabash was bored or inactive, it certainly was not due to a dearth of issues. The issues concerning radical students ranged from the appropriation (or malappropraition) of funds for the Athletic department to coeducation, with varying degrees of success. The fact that the college has even begun to consider many of these issues is an indication of the gains made by the "vocal leftist minority".

The major issue at Wabash, and indeed at most colleges across the nation, was the Indochinese War. Over the past four years, "the war" has provided radical students with a political context from which to launch any number of radical movements. The first major event for the left at Wabash was the "October Moratorium". On the 15th of October, many students did not attend classes, and instead participated in many of the seminars, memorials, and films that were coordinated by the ad hoc Moratorium committee. The moratorium in November was less formal than the preceeding one because many of the planners were in D. C. for the big march.

In February our administration placed aside two days for the whole Wabash Community to discuss some important issues of the day. The "Wabash Men", being true to Wabash's own brand of misoneoism, chose not to participate. Perhaps, when this event acquires the proper age and mediocrity to be hailed as a TRADITION, it can command greater student attendance than it did this year.

By far the most successful "radical" movement of the year was the Student Strike. It lasted for four days and was the result of Nixon's decision to invade Cambodia, and the killing of four Kent State students. During the Strike an Alternate University was set up, and alternate courses were offered. These courses generally dealt with some of the pressing problems of the day, and how we as college students should best ameliorate some of our society's social inequities.

The faculty stopped short of actually endorsing the Strike, and instead voted to help implement it. Such an action illuminates the intellectual haitus between faculty members and radical students. Whereas the faculty member's primary concern is the continuance of the university's academic processes, irrespective of the political situation external to the confines of academia; the radical student's primary concern is an overriding committment to social justice. These students feel that the university can not remain impervious to the realities of the world.

The faculty member argues that the politicization of the university opens the door for the abridgement of all academic freedoms. The radical student argues, rightly, that the conception of the university as free from politicization is illusionary, at best. They argue that as long as most large universities accept large federal grants, then they are already experiencing an abridgement of their academic freedom. Their freedom to use the money as they feel to is abridged because the grant generally carries with it some sort of stipulation as to how the money is to be used. The same is true for a private college like Wabash, except that in this case it is the private not the public sector that sets the limitations upon the college's academic freedom.

The radical student asks further, what good is my academic freedom if I am not free to relate my skills, presumably acquired as a result of that academic freedom, to the world that lies beyond the confines of academia.

The students at Wabash apparently felt that the question of an abridgement of the "academic" freedoms was a moot one, especially when they recognized what was going on outside of Wabash. They saw that what was happening outside was potentially more serious than the loss academic freedoms; they recognized that the politicization of the university was inevitable if they were to curtail the abridgement of their civil liberties. They realized that because of the university's abrogation of its sociopolitical responsibilities in the past they are now forced to acquire a relatively high degree of politicization. If the universities had always kept a relatively moderate sociopolitical awareness rather than aloofness, then they would not have to pay such a high price to insure their present and future freedoms. This sort of recognition played a large part in the student body's decision to endorse the "Bobby Seale Resolution". This resolution demanded that the Nixon administration do everything in its power to guarantee the constitutional liberties of Bobby Seale.

On the more parochial issues, students saw their power increased in many of the policy making areas. Examples are student representation on the Library, Financial Aid, International Education, Chapel, and Black Studies Committees. Also two potentially very important committees were created, the Trustee Committee on College Life, and its sub committee, the Coeducation Committee.

Perhaps one of the most ludicrous expressions of activism this past year was that antiactivism activist group, the Young Americans for Freedom's meeting to "End The Strike Legally". It was ludicrous because if a vote had been taken the YAFers would have been outvoted at their own meeting, by the "leftist Communists".

Next year I would venture to say that the single most important issue will be the issue of coeducation at Wabash. As more and more all-male schools go co-ed, the radical student in particular, and the intelligent student in general, finds it increasingly difficult to rationalize his reasons for coming to an all-male school in CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA. Certainly the students of the left have shown through their past progress that they are fully prepared to tackle what will undoubtedly be their toughest battle to date—coeducation!

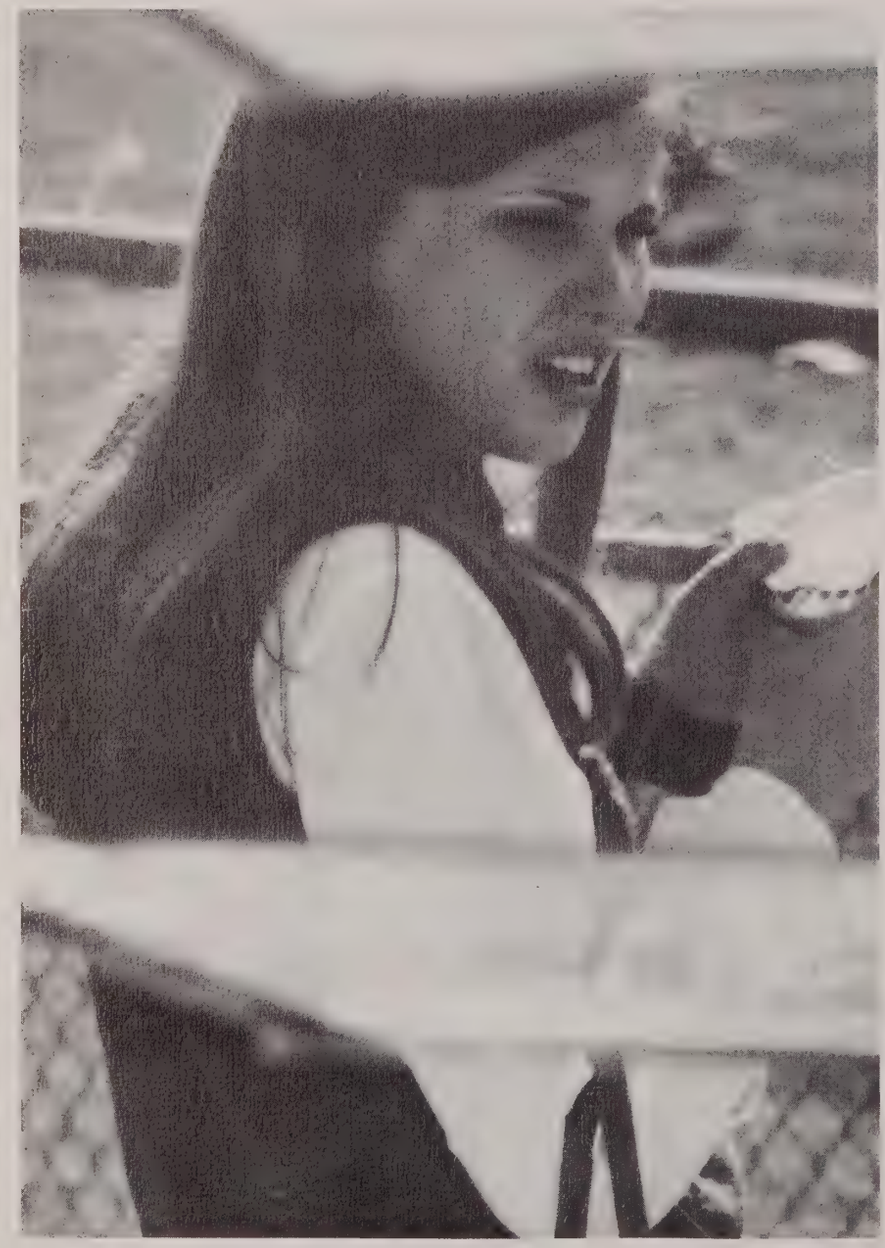
SPECTATORS



It is often said that Wabash's uniqueness lies in its sense of community and community is no where else more evident than in its diverse campus organizations and activities.

Action is the single thread that unites all those who do participate. Perhaps Thomas Fuller expressed it best when he stated that action is the proper fruit of knowledge.

Under the leadership of the Student Senate the Wabash "strike" ushered in, for better or worse, a new Wabash era. On May 5, by a 299-160 vote Wabash joined scores of other campuses across the nation in the new involvement. The spectre of student power became a reality. "No action, whether foul or fair . . ."

Petitions, speakers, leaflets—these too are the weapons of activism of the Political Right. During the strike the Young Americans for Freedom actively supported the right to go to classes. "is ever done, but it leaves somewhere . . ."

As for the economic libertarians, the John Van Sickle club used a variety of methods to further the principles of limited government and free enterprise. It boasted a roster of speakers that included such names as Eric Ritter vonKuenhnelt-Leddin on the moratorium, William Rusher, publisher of National Review magazine, on the Republican Southern Strategy, and David Freidman, son of the eminent economist Milton Freidman, on an Anarchist-Libertarian future. The club also published its educational organ, The Wabash Journal of Economic, Social and Political Opinion. "a record, written by fingers ghostly . . ."

The Black Experience was explored by the Afro American Student Union's program for the Wabash Community. Such men as James Turner, director of Black Studies at Cornell, Emmett Doe, a black Atlanta grass roots politician, and Dick Gregory graced the Wabash campus. The showing of the National Student Association film "No Vietnamese Ever Called Me Nigger" and group discussions at the "Afro House" rounded out the years program. "as a blessing or a curse or mostly . . ."

On the cultural scene, that perennial part of the Wabash establishment, the Glee Club and Band, highlighted their year of merry-making with a trip through the southeastern United States to perform for the various Wabash alumni Associations.

The Public Affairs Forum was responsible for helping to bring to campus several timely speakers ranging from Elkin Sithole on his native South Africa, the Hans Morgenthau-Scalipino debating on Vietnam, to Garrett Hardin on abortion. "in the greater weakness or greater strength . . ."

Several new organizations started off very auspiciously. The Sailing Club took third place honors among eight colleges and universities at their first meet in the Indiana University Spring Regatta. The club is well on its way to building a fleet with the acquisition of its first boat, a snipe, donated by senior Chip Gilbert. The fledgling Fencing Club under the direction of junior Jimmy Ho, has acquired a modest array of fencing equipment and hopes to enter intercollegiate competition next year. The International Student Union brought Wabash its first full-length blood and guts Chinese "Western"—The Swordsman Of All Swordsmen. "of the acts which follow it"—Longfellow.

The "new" Eta Sigma Phi, national honorary society for the classics, moved beyond its honorary distinction. By selling refreshments at the Basketball games, the organization netted $150 to aid two of its members in a summer of study in Italy. It both helped to form and grade the screening examination for the Indiana Honors Abroad Program to Rome. In addition, the chapter awarded achievement medals to two Montgomery County high school students. The "Active" Wabash Debate team placed 4th in the Pittsburgh Invitational Tournament, a tie for 3rd place in the Indiana State Championships and placed 1st in our own Friendly Little Wabash Tournament.

...ow Concern ...ecome Involved

by Dick Brickson, Political Editor

Early last semester, I submitted that the average Wabash man lacked concern and involvement in the outside world. Although it was obvious that no one could expect vast improvements in both, I felt it realistic to suggest that everyone become at least more concerned ...
